

He stayed behind after class today. Not to ask anything – just to be seen asking.

The professor smiled at him like he'd just quoted something brilliant. He hadn't. I know because I was there, too. I wrote the same thing down in my notebook, two days ago. He must've seen it.

Later, in the cafeteria, he told someone else it was his idea.

I wanted to correct him. I didn't.

I'm not sure if it would've made a difference.
Some people are immune to confrontation.
They know how to twist silence into a nod.

He makes people agree with him – even when no one speaks.
