CRIME SCENE REPORT

Case Reference: HERA/0312/2025
Filed by: Forensic Investigation Unit
Location: Radyo HERA, Broadcast Studio 1
Date of Incident: 12 March 2025
Victim: Onur Aydın

SUMMARY:

At approximately 19:57 on 12 March 2025, a fatal incident occurred during a live radio broadcast at Radyo HERA. The victim, Mr Onur Aydın (37), was found unresponsive inside Studio 1 shortly after the live stream was interrupted. Emergency response was delayed due to locked access and unclear internal communication.

First responders noted signs of electrical malfunction near the victim's workstation. Preliminary findings suggested a sudden spike in voltage through the studio's audio interface system.

The broadcast had begun at 19:45. Witness accounts and surveillance footage confirm that Onur was alone in the studio at the time of death. However, digital system logs retrieved later suggest unauthorised remote access and irregular behaviour in audio input systems.

Cause of death remains under forensic review.

Evidence Report #1 — Surveillance Camera Footage (Café)

Date Captured: 12.03.2025
Time Stamp: 17:45
Location: Ground floor café area, HERA Radio Building

Visual Description:

Black-and-white surveillance footage captured from a top corner camera shows three individuals in the café:

- Subject A (Murat Kaya): Seen preparing coffee near the counter.
- Subject B (Onur Aydın): Seated alone at a corner table by the window, looking at his phone.
- Subject C (unidentified female): Positioned near the exit, back to the camera. She is wearing a long dark coat and appears to be leaving the premises. Her body type suggests a heavier build.

Technical Note:

The timestamp confirms presence at the location shortly before the murder. No sign of external tampering with the footage.

Relevance to Case:

- Places the victim (Onur Aydın) at the location minutes before the incident.
- Establishes potential witness (Murat) and unidentified figure who may be linked to the exit/entry timeline.
- Subject C matches Selin Aydın's general appearance based on previous witness statements but cannot be confirmed visually due to her back facing the camera.

Evidence Report #2 — Frequency List (Handwritten Table)Date Found: 12.03.2025Location: Found on the floor of Studio B, near the victim's recording deskMedium: Graph paper with handwritten numerical listVisual Description:

A grid-like paper displays a sequential list of 26 entries, each labeled numerically (1–26), followed by a decimal value. The final column features the name "Cast" handwritten in the lower-right corner, suggesting authorship or ownership.

1) 100.0	14) 86.0
2) 101.0	15) 86.1
3) 100.3	16) 97.0
4) 101.2	17) 107.0
5) 100.5	18) 96.3
6) 102.4	19) 99.1
7) 103.4	20) 88.4
8) 101.6	21) 89.4
9) 90.0	22) 99.4
10) 90.1	23) 87.8
11) 90.2	24) 95.9
12) 106.5	25) 98.8
13) 103.3	26) 98.9
	Cast

Technical Note:

The values resemble audio frequency measurements or internal tuning parameters, though no clear unit is indicated. Analysis suggests a pattern correlating with broadcast signal strength or modulation testing, possibly linked to the studio's control panel.

Relevance to Case:

- The presence of this list in close proximity to the victim's body may indicate last activity.
- The frequencies may represent access codes, encrypted data, or internal system references.
- If treated as a cipher, the numbers could lead to a password or hidden folder—further forensic decryption is pending.

Evidence Report #3 — Note with "RAKUN11" Handwritten on ItDate Found: 12.03.2025Location: Studio B, main broadcast desk – top surfaceMedium: Physical sheet of standard printer paper

Visual Description:

A loose A4 paper sheet was found on top of the main desk in Studio B. The page contains no printed text or official markings. However, written in bold pencil strokes across the center is the term: “RAKUN11” — all uppercase. The handwriting was quickly but deliberately applied. There is no accompanying text, date, or signature.

The sheet has a slight horizontal fold and smudged edges, suggesting it was handled or carried loosely. No additional markings were found on the reverse side..

Notable Clues:

- The handwriting has not yet been formally matched to any individual, though its location strongly suggests ownership or use by Onur Aydın.
- “RAKUN11” is the same label found on a folder recovered from Onur’s personal computer (see Evidence Report #X), believed to contain psychological observation notes.
- Placement on the studio desk may indicate intentional disclosure, a signal, or a lapse in hiding a sensitive reference.

Relevance to Case:

- The presence of “RAKUN11” on an unmarked paper in the studio strongly ties the victim’s personal and professional domains.
- It suggests the possibility that Onur either intended to incorporate these notes into his broadcast or had been referencing them shortly before his death.
- May serve as a connecting clue between the hidden digital folder and Onur’s final broadcast preparation.

Evidence Report #4 — Handwritten Note Recovered from a Notebook

Date Found: 12.03.2025

Location: Broadcast Studio B – under the main console desk

Medium: Scanned page from physical notebook, torn from spine

Visual Description:

This image displays a ruled notebook page containing a handwritten note in English. The handwriting has been matched to Selin Aydın through comparative analysis with other documented samples. The note appears to be written in pencil and partially erased, though the text is still legible under digital enhancement.

The content reflects deep emotional tension and appears to be a personal, unsent message addressed indirectly to the victim, Onur Aydın. No direct name is used, but context and phrasing strongly imply the subject is Onur. The tone is wounded, restrained, and accusatory.

Transcribed Excerpt:

“Maybe: ‘You don’t get to use my voice like that.’

Or: ‘That part of me isn’t yours to dissect.’

But knowing you...

You’d probably just turn it into another story.”

Notable Details:

- The page was not intentionally left as a message; it may have fallen or been torn off accidentally.
- Forensics confirm slight fingerprint residue (non-identifiable) and tear patterns consistent with being pulled hastily from a spiral-bound notebook.
- Found near where Selin was observed standing shortly before the time of death, according to camera positioning logs.

Relevance to Case:

- The content strongly suggests Selin felt betrayed and emotionally violated by Onur’s use of personal information in his broadcasts.
- The note supports a potential motive by demonstrating internal conflict and unresolved tension toward the victim.
- Combined with her verbal testimony and message records, this note adds weight to her possible involvement or foreknowledge of the incident.

Evidence Report #5 — Torn Family Photograph (Bedroom)

Date Captured: 12.03.2025

Location: Onur Aydın’s apartment, bedroom – nightstand

Medium: Digital photograph of a partially torn physical photograph

Visual Description:

A small framed photo was found on the nightstand beside Onur Aydın’s bed. The photo, enclosed in a silver frame, depicts a family scene: two adults and two children. However, the image is visibly torn from the right side, with the face of one of the individuals deliberately ripped away. The torn piece is missing; it was not recovered from the room.

Upon examining the back of the torn family photograph, investigators discovered a handwritten phrase in faded pencil: “I AM BECOMING HIM.” The handwriting appears deliberate and emotionally charged, suggesting a possible identity crisis or unresolved paternal conflict. The torn-out face on the photograph corresponds to the presumed father figure, further supporting the theory that the victim, Onur Aydın, may have been experiencing psychological distress related to his father.

Notable Details:

- Based on aging and appearance, the image likely dates back 20–25 years.
- The individual whose face was removed appears to have been a male adult, possibly Onur's father.
- The remaining figures show a younger Onur, a woman (likely his mother), and a small child (possibly a sibling).
- The frame shows signs of wear and has smudges along the glass, indicating frequent handling.

Relevance to Case:

- This image may point to a deeply personal and unresolved familial conflict.
- In Onur's journal entries and psychological notes, multiple references are made to paternal control, emotional suppression, and intergenerational fear.
- The physical destruction of the father figure's image supports the emotional themes in his internal writings and provides material evidence of emotional instability.
- While not directly connected to the crime, the symbolic damage represented by this object suggests possible motivations and psychological deterioration in the days leading to Onur's death.

Evidence Report #6 — Framed Album Covers Wall

Date Captured: 12.03.2025

Location: Onur Aydın's apartment, living room

Medium: Digital photograph of the interior wall

Visual Description:

The image displays a dimly lit living room corner featuring nine framed album covers arranged in a 3x3 grid on the wall. Each album cover carries a cryptic and evocative title, such as "Under No Sky," "The Ivy Collapse," "Ruins and Rhythms," and "The Wallflower Script." The furniture below includes a wooden console, a standing lamp, a record player, and an open notebook placed on a coffee table.

Notable Elements:

- The album titles and aesthetics suggest a thematic preoccupation with isolation, psychological disintegration, and internal conflict.
- These artistic choices reflect a symbolic parallel to the themes found in Onur's radio shows and written observations.

- ### Relevance to Case:

- ## Evidence Report #7 — Bookshelf and Certificates Wall

Medium: Digital photograph of bookshelf and framed documents

The image shows a dark wooden bookshelf filled with academic-looking books arranged meticulously. Titles include terms resembling psychology, philosophy, and trauma-related works, though some titles appear distorted or stylized. To the right of the shelf is a wall with six framed documents: four diplomas/certificates and two other official-looking papers, one of which appears to be a formal letter.

- One visible certificate reads: “CERTIFICATE OF COMPLETION – Center for Narrative Trauma Studies.”
- A small sticky note on the wall reads “RAKUN11 – Archive.”
- Lighting in the room is intentionally low and moody, suggesting an introspective atmosphere.

- The bookshelf and certificates support Onur’s persona as an intellectual, potentially self-proclaimed therapist or analyst.
- The presence of specialized trauma studies raises questions about the ethical boundaries of his practice.
- The “RAKUN11 – Archive” note may refer directly to the hidden folder found in the crime scene (also labeled Rakun11), strengthening the link between his private workspace and the suspicious material.
- This location matches earlier journal entries in which Onur describes his home study as his “real archive.”

Evidence #11: Onur Aydın's Personal Computer

- Log records confirm voltage spike at 17:42 from studio control panel

VI. CONCLUSION & CAUSE OF DEATH

Official Cause of Death:

Acute cardiac arrhythmia due to external environmental electrical disruption

Manner of Death:

Undetermined — pending criminal investigation

Remarks:

While no external trauma or toxins were present, the presence of electrical interference signatures and systemic stress markers strongly suggests non-natural, possibly externally induced fatal event. No direct skin electrocution noted. Environment at time of death (radio studio) should be further assessed for system malfunction, sabotage, or induced surge conditions.

CİHAN KARAKAŞ – Broadcaster, Radyo HERA

Tarih: 14 March 2025 - Time: 10:30

Location: Istanbul Police Department – Interrogation Room 3

Interrogator: Assistant Inspector Cenk Er

[Recording started – 10:30]

CENK ER: Mr Karakaş, records show you were at the radio building on the day of the incident. Please state your full name, profession, and position at Radyo HERA.

CİHAN KARAKAŞ: Cihan Karakaş. I'm 34. I've been working at Radyo HERA for five years. I host a weekly culture and arts programme called "Colon Two Dots". I used to broadcast during the early evening slot on Wednesdays.

CENK ER: Did that slot originally belong to you?

CİHAN: It did, yes. But about two years ago, management restructured the schedule and gave that hour to Onur. They said he pulled in more listeners. Content-wise, I don't think he had more to offer than I did, but he was certainly more attention-grabbing.

CENK ER: Did that affect you?

CİHAN: Well, it's part of the job, isn't it? But yes, it stung. I'll be honest—there was tension between us. He didn't exactly hide it. He'd make indirect jabs at me during his broadcasts. I chose not to respond. I believe a microphone isn't a weapon for settling personal scores.

CENK ER: Where were you on the evening of 12 March, during the broadcast?

CİHAN: I arrived around 6pm. My office is on the floor above the studio. I stayed there until about 8pm. I was editing my own recordings. I didn't interfere with the broadcast.

CENK ER: Were you aware of the technical disruption during the show?

CİHAN: There was a brief flicker in the signal that caught my attention, yes. But I didn't intervene. Onur didn't like anyone meddling with his sessions. I assumed it was something he was tweaking—he liked modifying his own software settings, sometimes too much.

CENK ER: Do you think what happened was just a technical error?

CİHAN: It didn't look ordinary to me. The kind of voltage spike I saw... it felt deliberate. Or at least, not accidental. But I didn't cause it. I wasn't a friend of Onur's, but I wasn't an enemy either. We were... rivals.

CENK ER: When was the last time you spoke with him?

CİHAN: About a week before, in the corridor. He gave me a strange look and said, "Things change fast, don't they, Cihan?" I didn't reply. I was used to his cryptic remarks. He always said half of what he meant—if that.

CENK ER: How did you feel when you heard he'd died?

CİHAN: (pause) Oddly... like something had gone silent. A full silence. I used to feel his presence in every room, even when he wasn't there. Now... it's just still. Not peace. Just stillness. I didn't like him much, but he filled space. That has a weight of its own.

[Recording ended – 11:04]

INSPECTOR'S NOTE: Cihan Karakaş displayed a high level of technical awareness. He admits to professional friction with the victim but denied direct involvement. His testimony is consistent. No clear signs of deception, but the rivalry and his presence at the time of the incident warrant further observation.

BERİL YAMAN – Technical Assistant, Radyo HERA

Tarih: 14 March 2025 - Time: 14:15

Location: Istanbul Police Department – Interrogation Room 2

Interrogator: Chief Inspector Ayda Gür

[Recording started – 14:15]

AYDA GÜR: Ms Yaman, please restate your full name, position, and your responsibilities at Radyo HERA.

BERİL YAMAN: Beril Yaman. I'm 29. I work as a technical assistant at Radyo HERA. I mainly handle soundcards, mixer setups, and broadcasting software. If there's a technical issue during a broadcast, I'm usually the first to respond.

AYDA GÜR: On the evening of 12 March, a severe system failure occurred during a live broadcast, which led to the death of Onur Aydın. What do you know about that incident?

BERİL: To be honest, I found out about the broadcast interruption the next morning. I wasn't on shift that evening. Onur had his own setup—custom configuration. He didn't like other people touching his system.

AYDA GÜR: Records show that you accessed the system remotely at 19:44. Can you explain that?

BERİL: Yes. I connected remotely. I was checking device statuses and possibly updating a driver. It wasn't anything to do with the broadcast room specifically. I accessed the general server. I'm not even sure if the logs recorded it properly. The connection was brief.

AYDA GÜR: Your session lasted about ten minutes.

BERİL: Ten minutes might sound like a lot, but in technical terms, it's not. I didn't modify anything actively. After a few minutes, the system became unstable. I assumed it was a bandwidth issue and disconnected.

AYDA GÜR: You said the system was behaving "differently". What did you mean?

BERİL: The audio interface had been acting up for a few days. Not a voltage problem exactly, but delayed signal returns. Cihan had noticed it too. I believe he warned Onur. Maybe Onur tried something on his end. I really can't say.

AYDA GÜR: What was your relationship with Onur?

BERİL: Neutral. We weren't close, but we weren't hostile either. He asked for help when he needed it, and sometimes lashed out. He was inconsistent. You got used to it.

AYDA GÜR: Were you physically in the building that day?

BERİL: No. I was working from home. I accessed the system from my personal computer. Just device checks. No system-level changes.

AYDA GÜR: How did you react when you learned Onur had died?

BERİL: (takes a deep breath) It was a shock... and a strange feeling of dread. I didn't expect anything like this. But to be honest, the way Onur operated, so isolated and so intense—it felt like something was going to give. Not death, obviously. But something.

[Recording ended – 14:46]

INSPECTOR'S NOTE: Beril Yaman spoke cautiously and deliberately. Avoided technical detail while clearly possessing strong knowledge. Remote system access confirmed. She denies tampering. Emotional response minimal. A person of interest.

SELİN AYDIN – Freelancer / Sister of Onur Aydın

Tarih: 14 March 2025 - Time: 16:20

Location: Istanbul Police Department – Interrogation Room 1

Interrogator: Chief Inspector Ayda Gür

[Recording started – 16:20]

AYDA GÜR: Ms Aydın, we offer our condolences. We're aware this isn't easy, but we ask that you speak openly about 12 March. You mentioned visiting your brother Onur at the studio that day. Could you tell us why?

SELİN AYDIN: Thank you. Yes... I did go. We hadn't spoken properly in some time. Things had built up—family things, past things. I wasn't there to make peace exactly, but it wasn't a confrontation either. I just... felt like it was time to say something.

AYDA GÜR: And what was it you wanted to say?

SELİN: (long pause) Onur had a habit of interpreting things on his terms. He'd talk about your feelings like they were his own. I think... I wanted to stop being silent. I was always the quiet one. He always did the talking—for both of us. Since we were kids.

AYDA GÜR: What time did you arrive at the studio?

SELİN: Around 7:20pm, I think. I'm not certain. He seemed surprised to see me but not bothered. We sat down. He offered tea—I didn't drink it. We didn't talk much. He just nodded and said, "We'll talk properly another time." Then I left. He was getting ready for the show.

AYDA GÜR: Did you listen to the broadcast?

SELİN: No. After our last proper conversation... a month ago or so, I decided I wouldn't. I'd been too affected by the things he said. That night, I didn't open the stream. I didn't want to hear his voice. Not then.

AYDA GÜR: You're seen on camera near the studio holding a folder. What was in it?

SELİN: (uneasy) Just... an old notebook. From when I was younger. I brought it with me but didn't show him. I'm not sure why I had it really. Maybe it gave me courage. He never saw it. It never left my bag.

AYDA GÜR: Did you touch any equipment in the studio?

SELİN: No... I mean—maybe I adjusted the microphone slightly. Reflex. It was right there, awkwardly tilted. I just turned it a bit. Not a big thing. Then I moved aside. I know how touchy he was about his setup.

AYDA GÜR: How do you feel about what happened?

SELİN: (softly, after a pause)

Conflicted. I loved him, in a way. But I never really understood him. Or maybe I did, and that's what scared me. People think silence means nothing. But sometimes silence is where the real damage happens.

Sometimes silence kills more than words ever could.

[Recording ended – 16:48]

INSPECTOR'S NOTE: Selin Aydın remained composed, yet emotionally layered. She admitted being present but was vague about her actions. Language was careful. Repressed anger or pain possible. May be withholding more than she revealed.

SÜHEYLA BORA – Freelance voice artist / Former partner of Onur

Tarih: 14 March 2025 - Time: 18:05

Location: Istanbul Police Department – Interrogation Room 4

Interrogator: Assistant Inspector Cenk Er

[Recording started – 18:05]

CENK ER: Ms Bora, thank you for coming in. We know this isn't easy. Please state your full name, profession, and your relationship to the deceased, Onur Aydın.

SÜHEYLA BORA: Yes, of course... Süheyla Bora. I'm 37. I work as a freelance voice-over artist. I was... close to Onur for a time. Not just professionally. We were in a relationship. It wasn't a secret. Everyone at the station knew.

CENK ER: When did the relationship end?

SÜHEYLA: I wouldn't say it ever truly ended. There was no official break-up. He just... drifted. I asked, he stayed silent. When questions stop being answered, I suppose that's a kind of ending.

CENK ER: Did you have any contact with him on 12 March?

SÜHEYLA: No. We hadn't seen each other in some time. But I did go to the radio building that day. Not to see him—at least not directly. I had a few personal belongings left in one of the storage rooms: an old notebook, some tapes. I thought it was time to collect them. I didn't expect to bump into him.

CENK ER: Roughly what time were you there?

SÜHEYLA: Around half past six, maybe a little before seven. I never look at the clock closely. I judge time by the light. It was a grey evening, heavy in the air. The building felt the same. I don't remember speaking to anyone except perhaps the security guard.

CENK ER: How did you react when you heard about Onur's death?

SÜHEYLA: (pauses) I didn't understand it at first. I thought the screen had frozen. I read the headline again and again. I imagined him just... sitting there, unfinished. Like a sentence he never got to finish. His voice was never meant to be cut off. He had that kind of presence. Someone did this. And if they did, they knew him well. He never shared things lightly. People thought they knew everything about him because he spoke a lot. But he only spoke to fill the space. Not to share.

CENK ER: Did Onur hold a grudge against you?

SÜHEYLA: (laughs faintly) Didn't he hold a grudge against everyone? That's how he worked. Quiet anger. Unspoken lists of those who had disappointed him. I might've been on one of those lists. He had a way of making you feel shiny, then dull. I think I'd faded for him.

CENK ER: Did you listen to his final broadcast?

SÜHEYLA: No. I used to listen to every one of them. Sometimes I'd record and replay them just to hear what he'd say between the lines. He once said, "Some voices echo only when you're alone." That stuck with me.

Maybe now he's the one echoing.

[Recording ended – 18:34]

INSPECTOR'S NOTE: Süheyla Bora's testimony was emotionally erratic, bordering on poetic. While not directly linked to the incident, her statements indicate ongoing personal turmoil. Her presence at the station is confirmed. Needs no further immediate follow-up.

MİNE TAŞDEMİR – Cleaning staff, Radyo HERA

Tarih: 14 March 2025 - Time: 11:10

Location: Istanbul Police Department – Interrogation Room 5

Interrogator: Chief Inspector Ayda Gür

[Recording started – 11:10]

AYDA GÜR: Ms Taşdemir, please confirm your full name, age and your place of work.

MİNE TAŞDEMİR: Mine Taşdemir. I'm 41. I've been working with the same cleaning company for three years. I'm assigned to Radyo HERA three days a week. Wednesdays I usually go in during the late afternoon. That day was no different.

AYDA GÜR: On 12 March, what time did you enter the building?

MİNE: Around 5pm. Things were a bit messier than usual. Normally I start from the office floor but that day I started the other way round. I had to leave early—my son had a fever. His nursery called. I think I left around 7:40pm.

AYDA GÜR: Did you pass by the studio level?

MİNE: Yes. I'd gone upstairs to collect rubbish bins. On my way back down I passed the corridor by the broadcast room. The light was on. The door was slightly ajar, as usual. It never really closes properly. While walking by... I heard something.

AYDA GÜR: What did you hear?

MİNE: It's hard to describe, but... you know when a lighter misfires and gives off a sharp "zzzt"? It was like that—a short burst of static or something electrical. At first I thought it was from the computer, then maybe the microphone. I assumed they were live. I didn't interfere.

AYDA GÜR: Did you go inside?

MİNE: No, of course not. But as I was placing the bins down by the door, my hand knocked the edge of the desk. There was a bottle on it—it tipped slightly. I wiped it with my cloth straight away. I don't think it spilled, but the monitor flickered. Or maybe I imagined it. I was in a bit of a rush.

AYDA GÜR: What kind of bottle was it?

MİNE: Just a glass one. Looked like water. No label. I assumed someone had brought it in. There was other equipment around—headphones, microphones—but I didn't touch any of it. I just wiped the surface. I think I left quickly after that.

AYDA GÜR: Did you see anyone else?

MİNE: Not clearly. I heard a woman's voice, faintly. Not talking exactly... more like humming? Could've been a phone call. Could've been a rehearsal. I don't know. But after that there was no sound. Just that "zzzt" ringing in my head.

AYDA GÜR: Have you ever heard that kind of sound there before?

MİNE: No. The usual hums and beeps, yes, but not like that. This one was sudden. Unusual. I thought maybe something had shorted but... I didn't think to tell anyone. It wasn't my place.

AYDA GÜR: What was your relationship with Onur Aydın?

MİNE: We barely spoke. A nod, a quick hello. Once he asked me not to use the vacuum during his show—it interfered with the sound. That's it. No friendliness, no rudeness either. He had a... distant kind of presence. Not warm, not cold. Just... closed off.

[Recording ended – 11:34]

INSPECTOR'S NOTE: Mine Taşdemir gave a simple yet potentially significant statement. Her actions during cleaning may have disrupted the system unknowingly. Her description of the static noise aligns with the timeline of the incident. Needs to be cross-referenced with technical analysis.

MURAT KAYA – Café employee, CoffeeEra

Tarih: 14 March 2025 - Time: 15:30

Location: Istanbul Police Department – Interrogation Room 6

Interrogator: Assistant Inspector Cenk Er

[Recording started – 15:30]

CENK ER: Mr Kaya, please confirm your full name, age, and your place of work.

MURAT KAYA: Sure. Murat Kaya. I'm 28. I work at CoffeeEra as a barista. The café's located on the ground floor of the same building as Radyo HERA. I've been working there for about two years now.

CENK ER: What were your working hours on 12 March, the night of the incident?

MURAT: I was scheduled for the morning shift but stayed a bit longer. I was supposed to clock out at 5pm, but it was busy. I ended up leaving around 6:30pm. I was still behind the bar during that time. I'm visible in the security footage, apparently.

CENK ER: Did you see Onur Aydın that day?

MURAT: Yes. He came in during the early evening. He usually sat at the same table by the window. He ordered a latte—same as always. He was alone at first, but then someone joined him. A woman. Young, long black coat. I didn't get a clear look at her face.

CENK ER: Did they speak?

MURAT: Can't say for sure. The woman didn't sit down. She stood nearby, looked hesitant. I couldn't tell if they were together. It was brief. I think they left together, or at least around the same time. I was busy making another coffee, so I didn't see everything.

CENK ER: Had you seen the woman before?

MURAT: She looked vaguely familiar. I might've seen her around once or twice. Different people come in before Onur's shows. He rarely talked to anyone, though. That day was quieter than usual. The woman seemed... focused. Not nervous—more like tense.

CENK ER: What was your relationship with Onur Aydın?

MURAT: He was a regular. We'd exchange greetings. After his broadcasts, he sometimes stopped in. I knew how he liked his coffee—never took extra sugar. He wasn't chatty, but he noticed things. He'd watch people more than he'd speak. Sometimes he asked odd questions, but never said why.

CENK ER: Did you notice anything unusual that evening?

MURAT: No technical issues or anything. But the atmosphere was off. A bit too quiet. Maybe it was just the weather. Onur seemed more distracted than usual. Normally he made eye contact. That day he didn't even glance my way.

[Recording ended – 15:54]

INSPECTOR'S NOTE: Murat Kaya provided clear and observant testimony. His account aligns with CCTV footage. Likely identified Selin Aydın, though not by name. No involvement in the incident, but useful timeline witness. Atmosphere and behaviour details noted.

HALUK SEZGİN – Former Station Director / Technical Consultant

Tarih: 15 March 2025 - Time: 10:00

Location: Istanbul Police Department – Interrogation Room 2

Interrogator: Assistant Inspector Cenk Er

[Recording started – 10:00]

CENK ER: Mr Sezgin, please confirm your full name, your previous role at Radyo HERA, and your current connection to the station.

HALUK SEZGİN: Haluk Sezgin. I'm 58 years old. I was one of the founding members of Radyo HERA and served as its station director for nearly twenty years. I stepped down two years ago. I'm officially retired, but I still provide occasional technical consultation, especially on system maintenance and upgrades.

CENK ER: On the day of the incident, 12 March, did you access the system in any way?

HALUK: No, I wasn't on-site that day and I didn't actively engage with the system. However, early the following morning, I was notified of a system failure and remotely checked the logs. I still retain access to some system reports due to legacy permissions.

CENK ER: What did the logs reveal?

HALUK: There was a remote login recorded at 19:44, listed under the user "Beril Yaman." The IP matched internal records. There were no warnings or access blocks. At 19:57, the system suddenly halted. The session was locked, and logging was interrupted.

CENK ER: Do you believe this was just a technical fault?

HALUK: Not entirely. The studio equipment is robust. For the system to fail at that exact moment, during a broadcast, and following a remote access... it raises questions. I wouldn't jump to conclusions, but I also wouldn't call it accidental.

CENK ER: Would Ms Yaman be technically capable of manipulating the system?

HALUK: Absolutely. She's one of the few staff members who understands the infrastructure well. However, if she had malicious intent, she'd likely attempt to hide her tracks. But her login was direct, under her own name. That's either extreme confidence—or a mistake.

CENK ER: What was your assessment of Onur Aydın?

HALUK: Onur was intelligent, driven. He had a strong rapport with listeners. Internally though, he operated on his own terms. He wasn't consistent with schedules, or safety protocols. He resisted structure. That independence drew audiences, but created internal friction. People either admired him—or couldn't stand him. There wasn't much in-between.

CENK ER: How did you respond to the news of his death?

HALUK: It was shocking. But when I saw the warning in the logs, a part of me felt... something was coming. Not death, no—but a breakdown of some kind. There was too much tension in that room that night, even in the data.

[Recording ended – 10:34]

INSPECTOR'S NOTE: Haluk Sezgin provided a composed and technically insightful testimony. His observations point to the likelihood of intentional interference. No indication of direct involvement. His analysis of system behaviour is credible and valuable.

LEVENT ERTUĞRUL – Former Station Director / Technical Consult.

Tarih: 15 March 2025 - Time: 10:00

Location: Istanbul Police Department – Interrogation Room 2

Interrogator: Assistant Inspector Cenk Er

[Recording started – 13:45]

CENK ER: Mr Ertuğrul, please confirm your full name, age, and your connection to Radyo HERA.

LEVENT ERTUĞRUL: Levent Ertuğrul. I'm 35. I'm a freelance sound engineer. I worked as a technical consultant at Radyo HERA around four years ago. I was involved in the setup of part of their system infrastructure. I left shortly after.

CENK ER: Records show you attempted to access Radyo HERA's system remotely on the evening of 12 March at 19:47, using the alias "frekans11." Can you explain this?

LEVENT: Yes, I did attempt to connect. Some old system credentials must've still been active. The connection failed. I was blocked. It wasn't a hack or anything malicious—it was a simple systems check. Curiosity, if you like.

CENK ER: Why were you trying to connect to a system you no longer have authorisation for?

LEVENT: Look, some of the modules still in use at Radyo HERA were originally designed by me. I heard there were ongoing issues. I thought maybe I could take a look—offer help, even. Reflex, I guess. I didn't expect access to still be possible, and it wasn't.

CENK ER: Was it really reflex? Or does this relate to something in your past with Onur Aydın?

LEVENT: (pause) Onur... let's just say he wasn't always honourable in collaboration. We began a joint project to develop an open API for their broadcast infrastructure. It gained traction. I got cut out. My name vanished. He said "success is collective," and carried on like nothing happened. So yes, I was hurt. But I didn't intend to sabotage anything.

CENK ER: Did you contact anyone else that evening?

LEVENT: No. I was home. I tried to connect, failed, and went back to editing a project. You can check my IP logs. Nothing else happened.

CENK ER: Why use the alias "frekans11"?

LEVENT: It's an old handle from uni days. No real meaning. Maybe it stuck because of radio. It's personal, familiar. Not suspicious.

CENK ER: How did you feel when you heard about Onur's death?

LEVENT: It shocked me, but... it didn't surprise me. Onur lived on the edge. I always thought something would snap. I just never thought it'd be him that couldn't find a way out. He usually did.

[Recording ended – 14:12]

INSPECTOR'S NOTE: Levent Ertuğrul was composed and cautious. He admitted the connection attempt and acknowledged his resentment towards Onur. As the access failed, technical logs clear him of direct involvement. However, his motivation is noted. No further action at this stage.

TECHNICAL ANALYSIS REPORT

Subject: Analysis of System Activity Logs – HERA Radio Broadcast Studio B
Date of Incident: 12 March 2025
Report Compiled: 14 March 2025
Prepared By: Eng. Cem Gürsoy, Digital Forensics Unit – Istanbul Cybercrime Division
Case Reference No: HERA-DA-0301-25-TAR

I. INTRODUCTION

This report documents and interprets the technical activity recorded by the primary broadcast workstation located in Studio B of HERA Radio on 12 March 2025, between 19:15 and 19:57. The data analyzed originates from the internal system log file retrieved post-incident and securely extracted by forensic imaging from the local hard drive.

The investigation aims to determine whether unauthorized or malicious digital activity occurred during or prior to the suspected time of death of Onur Aydın.

II. METHOD OF ACQUISITION

- System unit (ID: STDB-HR-07B) was seized by forensic personnel on 13.03.2025 at 08:52.
- Hard disk imaged using FTK Imager v7.2 (write-blocked)
- Log file cihaz_log_12mart.txt recovered from /System/Logs/internal/
- SHA256 hash:
f47c8ae9b563bcb77d10d8164a5e5f6de79fa7a1a0f3d9aa0ce6b9237a9e3f29 (verified)

III. TIMELINE OF EVENTS (EXTRACTED LOG ENTRIES)

Time	Event Description	Notes
19:15:00	SYSTEM OK – standby mode active	System idle
19:30:14	SYSTEM OK – no anomalies	—
19:41:03	SYSTEM OK – recording standby	Onur Aydın likely preparing for broadcast
19:42:08	LOCAL ACCESS – Admin_Studio / IP: 192.168.0.12	On-site login
19:44:15	REMOTE ACCESS – b.yaman@hera.net / IP: 192.168.1.48	Beril Yaman's credentials used remotely
19:45:22	AUTH SUCCESS – Beril_Yaman (REMOTE)	Remote session fully active
19:47:03	REMOTE ATTEMPT – user: frekans11 / IP: 37.221.61.92	Blocked – concurrent session exists
19:50:36	AUDIO_INTERFACE CONNECTED – Device ID: ext-usb-07x3n9	External audio module activated remotely
19:52:41	UNKNOWN DEVICE – USB ID: XLR-SH1F-PVT	Sudden system reaction via unrecognized hardware
19:53:03	SYSTEM WARNING – Voltage peak on INPUT_CHANNEL_03	Critical anomaly detected
19:55:01	SESSION LOCKED – user: onur.aydin@hera.net	Auto-lock after inactivity
19:57:16	SYSTEM CRASH DETECTED – Logging interrupted	Final event before shutdown

IV. TECHNICAL INTERPRETATION

- Concurrent Session Conflict (19:47): The log shows that an attempt was made to establish a second remote connection under the user “frekans11” — possibly using a spoofed identity or unauthorized access key. The system blocked this attempt due to Beril Yaman’s existing active session.
- USB Activity Chain (19:50–19:52):
 - An external USB audio interface previously registered in the system (ext-usb-07x3n9) was remotely reactivated.
 - Less than 2 minutes later, an unrecognized USB device (ID: XLR-SH1F-PVT) was detected, triggering an immediate system reaction (audio interface response + voltage spike).
- Voltage Surge (19:53:03):
 - The spike recorded on INPUT_CHANNEL_03 is consistent with a targeted electrical overload, possibly used to disable or manipulate sound equipment.
 - No hardware burnout detected, but a temporary overload could have interfered with nearby equipment or even induced a health risk (as supported by autopsy report).
- System Shutdown (19:57:16):
 - The system did not shut down through normal procedures; crash was triggered internally, possibly as a failsafe after overload.

V. CONCLUSIONS

1. Beril Yaman’s remote login was real and successful, granting her full access to the system prior to the incident.
2. A second actor attempted unauthorized access but was blocked — identity unknown, but the alias “frekans11” was used.
3. The log confirms active tampering with audio hardware via USB ports, likely without physical presence.
4. The voltage spike was not system-generated and matches patterns observed in previous cases of intentional overload through modified audio channels.
5. A forensic hardware inspection is recommended for all USB ports and power supplies associated with INPUT_CHANNEL_03.

VI. RECOMMENDATION

- Further investigation of remote login history, DNS and MAC tracing from IP 37.221.61.92
- Interview all personnel with access to the broadcast USB gear
- Deep forensic recovery of last_mix.wav (referenced but unaired audio file)
- Full spectrum EMI test for potential sabotage instrumentation
